Härm, m. (–es) harm, grief, sadness, sorrow.

Syn. Harm, Gram, Kummer, Herzeleid. Kummer is the uneasiness or pain of mind produced by the loss of, or disappointment in the expectation of, any good, real or supposed sorrow. Gram is the pain occasioned by the deeply-felt loss of any highly-valued good, and denotes a more violent emotion than Kummer. Harm, although originally the same word as Gram, implies a higher degree of grief. Herzeleid is the pain of mind arising from the feeling of having suffered wrong, or from the mortification of receiving evil not only undeservedly, but at the hands of those from whom we least expect it.

*Intereſſánt, adj. interesting, important.

Syn. Intereſſant, Anziehend, Wichtig. That which is interesting does not excite in us the desire of possessing it, but merely that of enjoying or comprehending it. The Anziehende attracts by the sensible pleasure it causes in us. An object appears wichtig to our minds from the important results connected with it. Happy is he to whom wichtige pursuits are interesting; the attention he devotes to them will render the pleasures of the senses less anziehend.

*Intereſſe, n. (-s; pl. -n) interest.

Syn. Intereſſe, Theilnahme. Interesse in an object is that which excites in our minds the feeling we call Theilnahme. We listen with Interesse to any one who relates the dangers he may have undergone, because the narration probably engages our attention; but we listen with Theilnahme only when we feel ourselves in some way or other attracted to the narrator. We say: "das hat a great or not the least Interesse for me" instead of: "das erregt a great or not the least Interesse." We can, however, only say: "das erregt," but never: "das hat, great Theilnahme."

Irre, I. adv. 1. out of the right way, astray, in a state of error or perplexity; 2. confusedly, puzzled; 3. having lost the presence of mind; 4. insanely, deliriously; — gehen, to go astray, wander; — reden, to rave; II. adj. 1. confused, puzzled; 2. fig. wandering, insane; 3. doubtful, wavering, suspecting; fig. — ſeyn, to be wrong, confused, to be out, perplexed, to be mistaken; im Kopfe — ſeyn, to be out of one's wits; — machen, to put out, to perplex, confound; — führen, to lead wrong, mislead; — werden, to be or get perplexed, confused, puzzled; compos. —reden, n. delirium.

Syn. Irre, Unſinnig, Sinnlos, Verrückt, Wahnſinnig, Wahnwitzig. Irre is used of one whose ideas, during a state of illness, are void of any inward connection among themselves. Unſinnig and Sinnlos indicate a deprivation of the use of the understanding and senses, occasioned by any violent passion; in the Unſinnigen, however, this privation begins with the understanding, whence it spreads its baneful effects over the senses; with the Sinnloſen it at once stuns the senses, and thereby arrests the functions of the understanding. — Unſinnigkeit, Verrücktheit, Wahnſinn and Wahnwitz differ from each other by their duration. Der Unſinnige finds himself in a transitory state, which vanishes with its short-lived cause, whereas the condition of the Wahnſinnigen and Wahnwitzigen is permanent. Der Verrückte is distinguished from both the latter in this, that he lives in a continual waking dream. Wahnſinn implies the entire bereavement of the use of the understanding, in which a man takes that to be really true which he merely imagines. Wahnwitz manifests itself by a profusion of ideas; but as they are unconnected and confused, they are often absurd. The Wahnwitzige is talkative, his ideas are extremely mutable; the Wahnſinnige will often continue quiet, and apparently void of thought.

Syn. Kalbaunen, Eingeweide, Gedärme, Getröſe. Kalbaunen (related to the Greek χολάς) is used only of slaughtered animals and in culinary language; Eingeweide, on the contrary, is said likewise of men. The Roman anurspices inspected the Eingeweide, not the Kalbaunen, of the beasts sacrificed. Kalbaunen is nearly related to Gedärme; for both signify the same parts of the animal body; the former, however, only in so far as they are prepared for food. Hence the Gedärme of fish and birds are not called Kalbaunen, but Gedärme or Eingeweide. In scientific language Getröſe is distinguished from Eingeweide and Gedärme, as signifying properly only the mesentery or fatty wrinkled skin in the middle of the Gedärme; whereas Eingeweide signifies all the inner parts of the animal body, and Gedärme the canals containing the Getröſe.

Syn. Kalt, Froſtig, Kälte, Froſt. Kälte is the absence of heat in any degree; Froſt only in a higher degree. We call a body talt, when it has a less degree of warmth than our own body. Froſt, however, is that degree of Kälte, which freezes water. Kälte, therefore, begins to be Froſt at 32° Fahrenheit. If we judge of Kälte merely from sensation, we call it Froſt when it causes contraction of the skin, shivering, &c., vid. Fieberfroſt. Figuratively we call any one talt who is deficient in warmth of sentiment. Froſtig is that which excites no perceptibly agreeable feeling in others. A talter man must necessarily be a froſtiger poet; for he who is himself void of sentiment can excite none by his language in others; vid. taltſinnig.

Syn. Kaufmann, Handelsmann, Krämer. The term Kaufmann virtually implies that the goods in which one carries on a business are purchased by one. Handelschaft is more comprehensive than Kaufmannschaft. This seems to be the reason why a Kaufmann imagines to acquire a sort of honourable distinction by assuming also the title of Handelsmann. Kramer is a retail seller. He must therefore deal in many articles in order to obtain a quick return of the usually small capital he has to embark.

Syn. Klatschen, Plaudern, Schwatzen, Plappern. Plaudern is applicable to every discourse of trivial import, and which only serves as an amusement; for this reason plaudern has no definite and precise connexion. It is in itself neither blamable nor contemptible. All superfluous and useless talk is indicated by the word Schwatzen. Geschwätz is often annoying because it fatigues the attention unduly viz. Gewäsch. Klatschen is distinguished by its particular object, viz.: that of relating and liberally judging of the faults of others. Women of low station klatschen, ladies meistren. Plappern implies merely the moving of the organs of speech and the producing of the sounds of word without being aware of the sense of what is uttered. Children plappern in pronouncing words connectedly without any corresponding thoughts. Vid. Herplappern.

Syn. Kleid, Kleidung, Anzug, Gewand. Kleidung indicates not only what we use as a covering for the body, but also for the head and feet. A Kleid comprehends any of the articles of clothing we are accustomed to wear. In common life we call also a coat Kleid. It is the same with the female dress; Kleid is that part of the covering of the body, in which a female appears in society. An Anzug implies all we at once assume or put on to appear before others. A Gewand is a wide, long upper garment. It is therefore usually worn only on solemn occasions.

Kochen, v. a. & n. (aux. haben) to boil, to cook; fig. to digest; to ripen (of grapes) by the sun.

Syn. Kochen, Sieden. Kochen when used without any qualification has always reference to victuals. The mistress orders what is to be gekocht, when she settles what dishes shall come to the table. Sieden signifies merely to heat by fire. We sieden salt, soap, sugar, &c. Sieden implies a greater degree of heat than kochen. We say the water boils (kocht) when its surface is slightly agitated; it siedet when it leaves in bubbles and has attained the highest degree of heat.

Syn. Kost, Speise, Zehrung. Kost comprehends more than Speise. It implies not merely that with which we appease our hunger, but also that which according to our circumstances we are accustomed to enjoy. He who undertakes to furnish another with Kost, lends himself to more than he who undertakes to give him Speisen. Zehrung is that which any one requires for his support while abroad or on a journey; vid. Zehrgeld.

Köstbar, I. adj. costly, expensive, sumptuous; precious; —es Hausgeräthe, rich furniture; II. adv. expensively, sumptuously; preciously.

Syn. Kostbar, Köstlich, Kostspielig. Köstlich is used with reference to the intrinsic value of a thing; kostbar in so far as this value is expressed by a high price. Dishes which gratify the palate in a high degree are köstlich; they are also frequently kostbar. The difference between kostbar and kostspielig is, that the former implies Kosten or expense in general, the latter more and frequent expense. A building can be both kostbar and kostspielig, a law-suit only kostspielig.

Köstbarkeit, f. (pl. -en) 1. costliness, expensiveness, sumptuousness, preciousness; 2. jewel, trinket.

Kósten, pl. cost, expense, charges; fig. sacrifice, damage; auf Ihre —, at your expense; es geht auf meine —, I am at the charge of it; sich or einen in — setzen, to cause expenses; auf — der Wahrheit, at the sacrifice of truth; die — bestreiten, to defray the expenses; die — ersetzen, to refund the costs; in die or zu den — verurtheilen, to condemn into the charges; compos. —anschlag, m. estimate; —s anwand, m. expenditure; —ausgleichung, f. balance of expenses; —berechnung, f. calculation or computation of expenses; —ersatz, m. compensation (of the costs); —frei, adv. free from expenses, cost-free; —rechnung, f. bill of costs; —scheu, I. adj. afraid of the expenses; II. s. f. fear or dread of the expenses; —verzeichniß, n. list or register of expenses.

Syn. Kosten, Unkosten. Kosten implies merely the money expended for any object. Unkosten the expenses (Kosten) in so far as they are regarded as a loss or injury. He who loses a law-suit calls what it had cost him Unkosten; the judge divides the Kosten between the parties concerned.

Kósten, v. n. (aux. haben) with acc. of thing & dat. of pers. to cost, stand in, bear a price; to require; was kostet es Ihnen? what does it stand you in, es koste, was es wolle, at any rate or price; sich etwas viel — lassen, to be at great expenses for a thing; fig. to take much pains about a thing; sollte es meinen Hals —, though it should cost my life; es kostete mir die größte Überwindung, it required the greatest efforts on my part.

Syn. Kosten, Wetten. Gelten indicates the price with reference to the worth of the object; kosten with regard to the sum given for it. The price which a seller demands for any object is what the object is worth (gilt); what the purchaser pays for it is what it costs.

Kósten, v. a. to taste, try.

Syn. Kosten, Schmecken. Kosten is to bring anything into contact with the organs of taste to know the impression it makes in them. Schmecken is to experience and pronounce an opinion upon this impression. We need only take a small portion of any whole into the mouth to know how it tastes (schmeckt). We therefore kosten something or of something when we take any small quantity into the mouth with this intention.

Köster, m. (-s; pl. —) taster.

Syn. I. Kraft, Vermögen, Stärke. Kraft actually produces the effect; Vermögen is capable of producing it. Kraft is active and operative. Vermögen can become so. Stärke is a determinate and more especially a higher degree of Kraft. Start is the opposite to ſchwach or weak, Starke to Schwachheit. A child even has a certain Kraft, otherwise it could do nothing; but it has as yet no Starke.

Syn. II. Kraftlos, Unkräftig, Schwach. A thing is unkraftig when it fails to produce an effect, whatever may be the cause of the inefficiency; kraftlos and ſchwach, when the cause is want of force (Kraft). Kraftlos and ſchwach are used as well with reference to living as to inanimate objects; unkraftig is said only of the latter. A thing may be unkraftig for any one and yet not be kraftlos. The kraftloſeſte ſpeech will be kraftlos for one who does not attentively listen to it. The opposite to ſchwach is ſtark, as having a higher degree of force. The Schwache has no great degree of strength, but the Kraftloſe has none at all. Any whole is called ſchwach from the fewness of its parts and ſtark from their multiplicity. The whole may, therefore, be ſchwach, though each single part is ſtark. The army when composed of but few men is ſchwach, kraftlos when exhausted by long marches and fatigue.

Syn. Krank, Siech, Ungesund, Unpaß, Krankhaft. Ungesund signifies, in general, every defect in health including the smallest perceptible degree and such as is unattended with any considerable pain or debility. Krank is said of one who suffers from some particular and determinate disorder. Siech indicates the absence of health in a higher degree by which it is distinguished from ungesund; but it is said of such whose ailments are not among those enumerated by the nosologist, but which are characterised by their own peculiar marks, crises, &c. In this it is distinguished from krank. Unpaß or Unpäßlich, is said of one who, without being krank, is not altogether quite well. Kränklich implies the being subject to various attacks from which Krankheiten may easily arise. Krankhaft designates such a condition as has some resemblance to a really kranken state. We do not say "a krankhafter man," but "a krankhafter pulse."

Syn. Kund, Bekannt. Kund indicates knowledge obtained from without; bekannt has reference to that derived through the understanding. A stranger makes himself kund (known) when he mentions his name; but we make a pupil in geometry bekannt with the properties of a circle, triangle, &c. We therefore make facts and events kund and doctrines bekannt.

Kunde, f. 1. knowledge; 2. news, notice, intelligence; — nehmen von, to take notice, cognizance of.

Syn. Kunde, Kenntniß. Kunde implies a knowledge of facts or events; Kenntniß, what we know in general, whether doctrines or facts. The Kunde of former ages is the Kenntniß of ancient events. Of scientific objects we have Kenntniß, but no Kunde.

Kunde, m. (-n; pl. -n) 1. customer, chapman; 2. + acquaintance; 3. informer, witness; compos. —brod, n. household bread.

Kundig, adj. with genit. — seyn, to have a knowledge of, be acquainted with, versed, expert, experienced, skilful in.

Syn. Kundig, Erfahren, Geübt, Bewandt. The Kundige confines his knowledge merely to facts and physical objects, and consequently to that of individual things; the Erfahrene raises his knowledge to general truths and draws from what he has seen and heard universal propositions and rules from which he judges of other similar facts. A good pilot is kundig, acquainted with the coasts and ports in his own neighbourhood; but the dress must make him an erfahrener navigator. He who possesses a knowledge of anything, is kundig of it; he who has acquired an experience in a thing is geübt; and he who has entered upon undertakings and overcome difficulties and dangers, is bewandt. Good pilots are kundig, acquainted with the rocks and coasts; clever navi-läche, f. (pl. -n) (Scot. loch) slough, lake, puddle.

Syn. Lache, See (Ber), Pfuhl, Pfütze, Sumpf, Teich, Weiher. A See is not only the largest inland standing water, but it may also have an outlet, and consequently be consorted with rivers. Its water is, moreover, pure and is, for the most part, inhabited by different kinds of fish. A Pfuhl is smaller than a See, and has no outlet; it is sometimes limpid, at other times turbid, and may or may not contain fish. A Pfütze is a smaller Pfuhl, which may dissipate as easily as it is formed. A Sumpf is distinguished from the two last in having its waters over a soft soil which gives say un ler the feet. He who is not sure of his way in traversing a wood may easily stick fast in Sümpfen. In some boggy districts the Sümpfe do not dry up even in summer. Lache is peculiar to Upper Germany; its signification is the same as Pfuhl in Lower Germany. Teich and Weiher are distinguished from the rest as being artificial and destined as reservoirs for fish. Both, however, and especially the former, are often without fish and only serve as an embellishment to pleasure-grounds.

Lâcherlich, I. adj 1. inclined to laugh; 2. laughable, ridiculous; II adv. ridiculously; mir, ihm ist — (zu Muthe), I feel, he feels as if I, he should laugh.

Syn. Lächerlich, Belachenswerth, Komisch, Possierlich, Burlesk. The Belachenswerthe deserves to be laughed at, even if it should not always excite laughter. The Lächerliche is properly, what really provokes laughter; it is, however, often confounded with belachenswerth. The really Belachenswerthe should be the only source of the Lächerliche, but poets by humorous combinations, and associations can often make things lächerlich which are not at all belachenswerth. The Komische is the Lächerliche in action. Every thing komisch is therefore lächerlich, but every thing lächerlich is not komisch. The Possierliche (droll) is more especially the Lächerliche in gesture. The monkey on account of his lächerlichen motions, is a possierliches Thier (droll animal). Children, also, are possierlich, when in their games they imitate the serious manner of older persons. The Burleske consists in a lächerlichen representation of what is great and important. There is, however, a twofold sort of the Burleske; vid. Parodie, Travestiren.

Syn. Landeskind, Eingeborner, Einheimiſcher, Inländer, Eingeſeſſener, Anſaßiger. He who has his usual abode in a country is einheimiſch, he has his Heimath (home) there. But with regard to a certain part of the country, as a town or village, we also call him, who has his usual abode there, einheimiſch, though with reference to the entire country he is an Inländer. One is called a Eingeſeſſener in as far as he belongs to a certain district of the government or the administrative distribution of a country. An Anſaßiger is one who possesses some landed property in the country. An Eingeborner must have been born in the country. An Ausländer may be an Einheimiſcher but he can never be an Eingeborner of a country, however long he may have been einheimiſch in it. An Eingeborner, in so far as he has the rights and duties of a subject of the state, is a Landeskind.

Syn. Laub, Blatt. Blätter is said of all kinds of plants, Laub is peculiar only to trees. We say cabbage-Blatt as well as oak-Blatt. Flowers have Blätter, but no Laub. On trees Laub signifies collectively a great quantity of Blätter; Blatt, on the contrary, a single leaf. When the Laub falls off, the Blätter drop, and when trees get Laub, they get Blätter. Hence Laub has no plural.

T.* kind of wooden bowl (used in paper-mills); —darm, m. A. T. jejunum; —kopf, m. empty wit, addle-brained person; —köpfig, adj. empty-headed.

Syn. I. Leer, Ledig. Leer is what contains nothing; ledig implies that a thing has contained or would contain something, but does not. A bottle is leer, because nothing is in it; it is ledig inasmuch as it can be filled. Leer, however, is used in both these senses. A place is ledig, when no one possesses it, who may hinder another from taking it. In speaking of incorporeal objects we can only use leer, and not ledig. An ignorant man is called a leerer Kopf, and not a lediger Kopf. So we also say leere promises or words, and not ledige. An unmarried person is called ledig, because no connexion exists, which hinders him from contracting marriage. In like manner any post that is vacant is called erledigt, a place or service ledig. We say the throne is erledigt.

Syn. II. Leer, Wüſte, Oede. A place is leer from want of objects, wüſte, inasſar as it cannot, on that account, be inhabited by man, and öde, when we find in it nothing that is useful or agreeable to him, more especially the absence of other human beings. Bottles, dishes, pockets, boxes, &c. are leer, when there is nothing more in them; a country lies wüſte, when it is uninhabitable; the cell of a nun is neither leer nor wüſte, but its inmate may find it öde, when she seeks in vain for what alone could satisfy the yearnings of her heart.

Syn. I. Leichtfertig, Lose, Muthwillig, Verbuhlt. Those are leichtfertig who do not consider whether their pranks are hurtful to others or not. Lose are those who somewhat outstep the proper bounds, or do things in joke or from malicious pleasure which they, at least, do not think wrong or hurtful. We say a loser, leichtfertiger boy, and the same also of a girl. Those are muthwillig who intend some injury by their freaks. Leichtfertig is, therefore, a lesser fault than muthwillig, although in common parlance the latter is often used for the former and without any bad accessory idea. Great reproach is implied when we call a female leichtfertig; this, however, may originate merely from Leichtsinn. Verbuhlt is an epithet of still greater reproach.

Syn. II. Leichtsinnig, Flatterhaft. Leichtsinnig indicates the inability to receive sufficiently strong impressions from objects with respect to their causes; flatterhaft with regard to their effects. A leichtsinniger man takes what is of most importance to him, and forgets directly the greatest losses, because, from want of attention, the most important things make no impression on him. An effect of this disposition is Flatterhaftigkeit, or the rapidity with which a man hurries from one object of his choice to another.

Liebig, m. (–es; pl. –e) provinc. bull-finch.

Liebkosen, v. a. insep. to caress, fondle, cherish, soothe.

Syn. Liebkosen, Schmeicheln. An older person can liebkosen a younger one, or one of higher rank an inferior, as well as a younger person can one older, &c. Only an inferior can schmeicheln a superior, younger persons oder one's. A mother liebkoset her child and is geliebkoset by the same, but the child only schmeichelt the mother. Schmeicheln can also be said of animals; liebkosen cannot, save in doing so the use of language becomes necessary.

Syn. Liebling, Schooskind, Günstling. A Liebling is preferred to all others and has the first place in the affections of the person by whom he is beloved; a Schooskind is the one most tenderly fostered and petted, often indeed more than is proper. Günstling is one to whom another extends his special favour or Gunst. The Schooskind is always a Liebling, but not inversely. The great and rich have their Günstlinge, who sometimes are their Lieblinge. The poor man has no Günstling, but he can have his Liebling, though it may be only among animals. One is therefore the Günstling of a superior, and the superior has an inferior for his Günstling; one can, Lover-over, have a Liebling among one's equals and even among one's superiors.

Syn. Livrée, Montur, Uniform. According to present usage Livrée signifies the dress of the male-servants in a family; Montur the distinctive dress which the common soldier wears in service. Uniform is the distinctive dress of the higher military, worn by virtue of a certain rank or office. At present, however, Uniform implies a distinctive dress, not only for the officers of the army, but also for other ranks, as, Jagduniformen, Kammerherrn uniformen, Poſtuniformen.

Syn. Loben, Rühmen, Preisen, Herausstreichen. We rühmen and preisen a person, when we seek to spread our good opinions of his perfections among others. Loben and preisen consist only in the favourable judgment we form of a person; rühmen implies the making known the good actions for which any one deserves to be praised. Loben is opposed to tadeln, Ruhm to Schande, and rühmen to schmähen, preisen to verachten. He who herausstreicht anything, praises it, because he conceives its good qualities are not sufficiently known or appreciated. A tradesman streicht heraus his goods to procure purchasers for them.

Syn. Loos, Schickſal, Ungefähr, Zufall. We employ Loos with reference to chance, Schickſal when we think of a higher will. When we are satisfied with our Loos, we call it an agreeable one, and when discontented, a wretched one; but the happy man blesses his Schickſal, and the miserable one curses it. Zufall implies an event the course of which we do not know; Ungefähr that to which we ascribe no origin of an event. A Zufall arises from Ereigniß, and Ungefähr leads to many Zufälle. Loos is distinguished from these terms as being a Zufall dependent on luck or misfortune; nay, often on a whole series.

—ſtück, n. piece of a mark; —zahl, f. a determined number.

Syn. Mark, Grenze. Grenze is said of unextended as well as of extended things; Mark only of the latter. We assign Grenzen to the human understanding and not Marken; but the Grenze of a village we call its Mark. When both these words are used of any district, the extreme end is called its Grenze, or if of small extent, its Mark.

Syn. Mittel, Weg, Werkzeug. Whatever is, or seems to be good for the attainment of any end is a Mittel; we call it a Weg when it consists in an action or actions. To get into an office by marriage is often the right Mittel, since it avails more than merit; but it is never the right Weg. A Werkzeug is something artificially contrived for a particular use; Mittel whatever is used for any end. A good physician knows the best Mittel by which his art can cure diseases, and a clever surgeon is able to use with skill different surgical Werkzeuge.

Syn. Nachtheil, Schaden, Verlust, Abbruch. Everything that is an evil, whether relating to a person or a thing, is a Schaden. Anything which is no evil in itself, but from which an evil to another may arise, conduces to his Nachtheil. When the evil consists in the deprivation of any good, it is a Verlust, and when it leads to the diminution of any good, it does him Abbruch. An apostleme in the foot is a Schaden, because it is an evil. It conduces to the Nachtheil of a tradesman when another establishes himself in the neighbourhood. He suffers Abbruch from it in so far as his gains are divided, and a Verlust, inasmuch as some of his customers leave him, which cannot but do Schaden to his business.

Syn. Natürlich, Naiv. Natürlich may be applied to anything; naiv only to persons, or their actions and language in so far as they are tokens of simple and unsophisticated nature. The Naive in persons is distinguished from the Natürlichen also as indicating the highest degree of the Natürlichen. In the Naive, therefore, reflection has no share; whilst in the Natürlichen it is not excluded. The Naive is consequently opposed to reflection as well as to artificiality; the Natürliche is opposed only to the latter Nöthhaft, adj. + & provinc. needy, compulsory.

Nöthig, adj. necessary, needful; etwas — haben, to need, want, stand in need of, have occasion for; das —e, the necessaries; Mangel an dem —en haben, to want the necessaries of life.

Syn. Nöthig, Nothwendig. What is nothwendig cannot be otherwise, whereas that which is nöthig may be so, though for a certain reason it is not otherwise. A triangle must nothwendig have three angles, neither more nor less. When any one borrows money, he has it nöthig, e. g. for a building, &c.

Nöthigen, v. a. 1. to necessitate, force, constrain, compel; 2. to urge, press; 3. to invite; sich — lassen, fam. to stand upon ceremonies.

Syn. Nöthigen, Zwingen, Verpflichten. Nöthigen conveys the idea of compulsion by which any one is genöthigt to do a thing. Verpflichten indicates a moral necessity. The rain nöthigt me to remain at home, i. e. makes it necessary, if I do not wish to get wet. A benefit verpflichtet me to be grateful to my benefactor. Zwingen implies that we do a thing unwillingly, whereas, what we are verpflichtet to do, we often do with pleasure.

Nutzbar, I. adj. useful; fit for use; profitable; II. adv. usefully, profitably.

Syn. Nutzbar, Nützlich. Thoughts, doctrines, laws, precepts, actions, &c. are nützlich; the sheep is a nützliches and a nutzbares animal, the plum-tree a nützlicher and nutzbarer tree. That by which a thing becomes nutzbar consists in the products it affords us, by which our property is increased. Cicero investigated the question whether virtue is nützlich; whether it is nutzbar, i. e. whether it brings us profit and makes us richer, he did not think of inquiring.

Nutzbarkeit, f. usefulness; fitness for use.

Nutze & Nütze, adj. of use, useful; nichts — seyn, to be of no use.

Offenbaren, v. a. & refl. 1. to manifest, to make public; 2. to reveal; 3. to discover, disclose, open (a secret) sich or sein Herz —, to unbosom one's self.

Syn. Offenbaren, Bekannt machen, Eröffnen, Anzeigen, Entdecken, Verrathen. That which is bekannt gemacht is brought to the knowledge of others; that which is angezeigt is intended for the information of one or more whom it more particularly interests or concerns. When we inform a person of anything, in which we ourselves are interested, with a view to influence his will, we eröffnen it to him. That which is bekannt gemacht, angezeigt or eröffnet is not necessarily anything secret; but whatever is offenbart, entdeckt or verrathen, has been till then a secret. Entdecken can take place involuntarily, by chance, or want of caution and is in this distinguished from offenbaren. Verrathen borders nearly on entdecken, but is distinguished from

Syn. Ort, Platz, Stelle, Stätte. Ort indicates a portion of space without any necessary idea; Platz, a place where anything can rest and remain; Stelle, the place which a thing occupies according to a certain order, determined by the relation of other co-existing things. The Stelle of anything is determined by what is near it. They looked for the Stelle where he was murdered, and found that it was a green Platz surrounded by thick bushes. Stätte contains the accessory idea of rest and continuance. It is therefore the proper Stelle in which any individual thing always is. We have here (in this world) no fixed or permanent Stätte.

Syn. Pfaffe, Pfarrer, Prieſter, Prediger, Geiſtlicher. Priester is one who officiates in any religious rite, who performs the sacrifices and belongs to the most sacred and revered class. In the catholic portion of the Christian church this denomination has been retained, the mass being considered as a sacrifice. The Protestant church, on the other hand, has no longer any Priester, but only Prediger (religious teachers, preachers). Pfarrer, Pfarherr, in Catholic church, is a Priester, and among the protestants a Prediger, who has the right to administer his office in a parish (Pfarre) and to enjoy the income attached to it. Pfaffe is a low and contemptuous expression for Priester, vid. Bauleyfaffe. Geiſtliche are all those who belong to that class who devote themselves to the performance of religious duties in contradistinction to the laity.
